

Say Canal Will Mean Hawaiian Land Boom

United Press Service

HONOLULU, Aug. 29.—Hawaiian islanders are looking forward to a tremendous boom in the territory following the opening of the Panama canal. From the standpoint of the great land owners and their better paid dependants, the prediction seems to be based on sound reasoning. In working circles, however, some dissenting voices are raised.

The Hawaiian natives, it is agreed on all hands, except, perhaps, in native circles, have never made satisfactory laborers. The Japanese have done tolerably well, and the Chinese still better, though they have annoyed the land owners by insisting generally on doing plantation work on shares rather than for definitely fixed wages.

The Chinese exclusion law and the agreement between the United States and Japan have cut off labor supplies from these two sources, however, with the result, during the past few years, that wages have been increasing, and there has not been enough of it at any price.

The shortage has been partly supplied by importations, under rather thin evasions of the anti-contract labor law, from Southern Europe, and especially from Portugal. The expense of bringing them has been heavy, however, and on their arrival they have generally insisted on current wages. The number brought in has been comparatively so small that they have usually carried their point, or approximated it.

The common view is that the opening of the canal will cheapen the trip from Europe to the islands so much that there will be a flood of immigration, with corresponding advantages to the employers.

On the Pacific Coast the unions have been taking steps to meet such an expected situation, but here, owing to the class of workers and the completeness of the landlord's domination, unionism has never secured much of a foothold.

Hawaiian agents already in Europe, not contracting for workers, but pointing out to them advantageous conditions they will find in the territory, and the small cost of the voyage as soon as the canal is open.

King Albert Reviewing His Troops

For the first two weeks of the European war King Albert of Belgium was the only monarch of Europe actually in the field to lead his troops. Time and again when the fighting around Liege was at its height reports came that he had gone out to command his armies. The wonderful stand Belgium made against the crushing German force is in a large measure accounted for by the fact the king himself was willing to share the physical dangers of war.

"THE SPOILERS," MADE INTO A NINE REEL FEATURE, WILL BE SHOWN AT HOUTON'S OPERA HOUSE TOMORROW AFTERNOON AND EVENING—STARS ARE PLAYING LEADING ROLES

The Selig Polyscope company, in picturing the virtue and undying romance of Rex Beach's "The Spoilers," have made a new revelation historical, showing once again that fiction has a higher aim than fact in its large appeal to interest; in a new pictorial triumph both to imprison and release human interest.

Charles Dickens wrote remarkable character creations in great variety, and in the telling of his stories, frequently revealed abjects and conditions that inspired drastic reforms; so this vivid page of yesterday, from the facile and fearless pen of Rex Beach, showed the trails of graft and greed, and pointed out their glaring cruelties and illegalities so trenchantly that it "started something"—something that arrested the spoliation of Alaska.

With his usual perspicuity, Wm. N. Selig, the head of the Selig Polyscope company, observed a trinity of values in this romance for potential picturization, absorbing in heart interest, and freighted with big, practical issues of life, and a vital document of days, of scenes and of events that will never return.

The clear, terse style, the tenacity of purpose, the correlation of dramatic incidents and the big sympathies that permeate "The Spoilers," makes it peculiarly adapted for visualization. This thrilling romance of the gold fields of our Northwest, if strong in sentiment, is steeped in fierce primitive fashions inspired by insidious evils that invest the closing coils of a great conspiracy for robbing honest toil of its golden fruits, and it has braved privations with death ever imminent, day by day, or through the long night of the Midnight Sun.

things in contrasting figures to the rugged miners, is sweet and refreshing as well as reliant and imperious womanhood, to give it interest in unusual ways—sobering and surprising as it touches the hearts and actions of rugged and battling men. These strong elements in the melting pot of this romance, fuse to make a great work intense, picturesque and potential beyond compare, as far as current production of motion pictures is concerned.

This masterful picture will be presented for the first time in Klamath Falls at Houton's opera house Sunday afternoon and evening.
